TakeSure — Mascot concepts for Quest 2 (Mascot Design)

Team Bug Hunters · Hack@BVP 8.0 · Four original characters, each with a name, personality, backstory and a link to the mission and the team name

The thread that ties the team, the project and the mascot together: we are Bug Hunters. In software, a bug is the hidden error nobody notices until it bites. In medicine, the bug is the herb–drug interaction nobody checks: the ashwagandha next to the thyroid tablet, the giloy next to the transplant drug. TakeSure hunts those bugs before the first dose, and every mascot below is a bug hunter in their own way.

Recommendation: submit Shikari. He carries the team name on his chest, the project in his body, and the mission in his net. Sure-ji is the alternative if you prefer the calmer, product-first character.

0. Shikari — Bug Hunter on duty RECOMMENDED

Who: A capsule-and-leaf character in a safari hat with a saffron band, a monocle over one eye, a "BH" shield badge on his chest, boots, a thumbs-up, and a butterfly net in which he has just caught a small red bug. Look closely at the bug: its body is half pill, half leaf. That is the interaction bug.

Where he came from: Shikari (Hindi for hunter) is the field agent of Team Bug Hunters. Every hackathon team hunts bugs in code; we realised India has a bigger bug that no one hunts. It lives in the gap between two medical systems: the ashwagandha next to the thyroid tablet, the giloy kadha next to the transplant drug. It hides on chemists' shelves and in grandmothers' advice, and it bites quietly, months later, in a blood test. Shikari put on his hat, picked up a net, and went looking for it, one herb–drug pair at a time.

Personality: Cheerful, methodical, a little proud of his catch. He never panics and never guesses: if a pair is not in his field notes, he says so and keeps hunting.

Connection to the mission and the team: His body is the product: a saffron allopathic capsule on top, an emerald Ayurvedic leaf below, both systems in one. His net is TakeSure's rule engine, which catches the clash before the first dose. His monocle is the evidence grade on every row. The BH badge is Team Bug Hunters, and the bug in the net is the one we hunt: the hidden herb–drug interaction. Catchphrase: "Bug pakda. Ab lo." (Bug caught. Now you can take it.)

1. Sure-ji — the one who checks first

Who: A kindly uncle-shaped capsule. Top half saffron like an allopathic tablet, bottom half an emerald leaf with veins. Round glasses, a neat moustache, a clipboard with a tick in one hand and a raised index finger in the other.

Where he came from: He was born in the top drawer of a chemist's counter in Old Delhi, where a strip of Thyronorm and a bottle of ashwagandha lay side by side for eleven years without anyone asking whether they got along. The day a grandmother finally asked "ye dono saath le sakte hain?", the drawer had no answer. Sure-ji climbed out so that nobody would ever get silence again.

Personality: Calm, never alarmist, a little old-fashioned, speaks Hindi and English, and is honest enough to say "mujhe nahi pata" when something is not in the database. He never tells you to stop or start a medicine; he hands you three questions for your doctor.

Connection to the mission and the team: He is both systems in one body, so he feels a clash before you do. His clipboard is the knowledge base: every tick has a source. His raised finger is the pause the name is about. And he is the chief Bug Hunter: the "bugs" he hunts are the hidden herb–drug clashes that live unnoticed between two medical systems, and he catches them before they bite. Catchphrase: "Pehle check karo, phir lo."

2. Dadi Tulsi — wisdom, now with sources

Who: A grandmother who is also a tulsi leaf: silver bun with a fresh sprout, red bindi, spectacles on a chain, a saffron shawl, a bangle, and a magnifying glass with a tick inside it.

Where she came from: Every Indian courtyard has a tulsi plant and a dadi who says "ye le lo, theek ho jaoge". Dadi Tulsi is that voice, the home-remedy wisdom of a hundred million households. One day her grandson's thyroid test went wrong after a herb she recommended, and she decided that wisdom alone was not enough. She put on her glasses, picked up a magnifying glass and started checking the source before every "le lo".

Personality: Warm, bossy, impossible to say no to, and now rigorous. She still loves Ayurveda; she just refuses to guess.

Connection to the mission and the team: She is the Ayurveda side of TakeSure growing an evidence habit. The magnifying glass is the evidence grade on every row, and it is also her bug-hunting lens: she inspects every remedy for the hidden clash before she recommends it. Catchphrase: "Beta, pehle dekh lo."

3. Chiku the Mongoose — the herb detective

Who: A young mongoose in a white lab coat, a leaf tucked behind one ear, a capsule in the coat pocket, a magnifying glass over a tablet, and a curling striped tail.

Where he came from: In Indian folklore the mongoose is the original herb detective: after a snakebite it runs to find the one plant that counters the venom, the "nakuli" of the old texts. Chiku grew up in an Ayurveda garden in Kerala, learnt every leaf by smell, then followed a visiting pharmacologist to a lab in Delhi and learnt what a controlled trial is. Now he sniffs out the one thing nobody looks for: a herb and a tablet that fight each other.

Personality: Curious, quick, playful with children, deadly serious about evidence. He refuses to pronounce a pair safe until he has seen the paper.

Connection to the mission and the team: He is the matcher and the rule engine in fur: he reads the names, checks the pair against the knowledge base, and shows you where the proof came from. A mongoose is nature's bug hunter, and Chiku hunts the one bug chemists cannot see: a herb and a tablet that fight each other. Catchphrase: "Sniff it, check it, then take it."

4. Tikku — Pehle check!

Who: A bouncy, kid-sized green tick mark with a saffron cap, sneakers, a leaf in one hand and a capsule in the other, shouting "Pehle check!"

Where he came from: Tikku was born the moment the first TakeSure verdict turned green. He is the GREEN result come alive, and he has one rule: he does not appear until you have checked. Take two things together without asking and he simply is not there. Ask first, and he jumps out, cap and all.

Personality: Energetic, loud, impossible to ignore, made for Instagram and stickers. He turns amber when he is worried and red when he sees a bad pair, so his colour is the verdict.

Connection to the mission and the team: He is the verdict itself as a character: GREEN, AMBER, RED in one body, and "not in database" is when he shrugs. He is the youngest Bug Hunter: a bug-free pair is the only thing that makes him appear. Catchphrase: "Pehle check!"

Text to paste into the form (for Shikari)

Mascot name: Shikari — "Bug Hunter on duty".

Backstory: We are Team Bug Hunters, and like every hackathon team we hunt bugs in code. Building TakeSure, we realised India has a bigger bug that nobody hunts. It lives in the gap between two medical systems: the ashwagandha next to the thyroid tablet, the giloy kadha next to the transplant drug. It hides on chemists' shelves and in grandmothers' advice, and it bites quietly, months later, in a blood test. So our field agent put on a safari hat, picked up a net and went looking for it. His name is Shikari, the hunter. His body is our product: a saffron allopathic capsule on top and an emerald Ayurvedic leaf below, both systems in one, so he feels a clash before you do. His net is TakeSure's rule engine, which catches the herb–drug interaction before the first dose, and the small red bug inside it, half pill and half leaf, is the one we hunt. His monocle is the evidence grade on every row of our knowledge base. The BH shield on his chest is Team Bug Hunters. Shikari is cheerful, methodical and honest: if a pair is not in his field notes he says so and keeps hunting, and he never tells you to stop or start a medicine, only what to ask your doctor. Catchphrase: "Bug pakda. Ab lo." Original character by Team Bug Hunters.

Short version: Shikari is Team Bug Hunters' field agent and TakeSure's mascot. Hackathon teams hunt bugs in code; we hunt a bigger one, the hidden herb–drug interaction that lives between India's two medical systems and bites quietly months later. Shikari's body is our product, a saffron allopathic capsule over an emerald Ayurvedic leaf; his net is our rule engine, catching the clash before the first dose; the half-pill, half-leaf bug inside it is the one we hunt; his monocle is the evidence grade on every row; the BH badge is our team. Catchphrase: "Bug pakda. Ab lo."

Alternative text (for Sure-ji)

Mascot name: Sure-ji — "the one who checks first".

Backstory: Sure-ji was born in the top drawer of a chemist's counter in Old Delhi, where a strip of Thyronorm and a bottle of ashwagandha lay side by side for eleven years without anyone asking whether they got along. The day a grandmother finally asked "ye dono saath le sakte hain?", the drawer had no answer. Sure-ji climbed out so that nobody would ever get silence again. He is a kindly uncle-shaped capsule: his top half is a saffron allopathic tablet, his bottom half an emerald Ayurvedic leaf, because he is both medical systems in one body and feels a clash before you do. He carries a clipboard, which is TakeSure's knowledge base, where every tick has a published source, and he raises one finger for the pause our name is about: confidence before taking something. Sure-ji is calm, never alarmist, speaks Hindi and English, and is honest enough to say "mujhe nahi pata" when a pair is not in the database. He never tells you to stop or start a medicine; he gives you three questions for your doctor. Our team is Bug Hunters, and Sure-ji is our chief bug hunter: in software a bug is the hidden error nobody sees until it bites, and in medicine the bug is the herb–drug clash nobody checks. TakeSure hunts those bugs before the first dose, and Sure-ji is the face of that hunt. His catchphrase: "Pehle check karo, phir lo." Original character by Team Bug Hunters.

Short version: Sure-ji is TakeSure's mascot: a kindly uncle-shaped capsule, half saffron tablet and half emerald leaf, because he is both of India's medical systems in one body. Born in a chemist's drawer where a thyroid tablet and an ashwagandha bottle sat together for years with nobody asking if they got along, he climbed out so no one would get silence again. His clipboard is our knowledge base, where every tick has a source; his raised finger is the pause before taking something. Calm, bilingual, never alarmist, and honest enough to say "I don't know". We are Team Bug Hunters, and Sure-ji is our chief bug hunter: the bugs he hunts are the hidden herb–drug clashes nobody checks, and he catches them before they bite. Catchphrase: "Pehle check karo, phir lo."

Files in the "TakeSure Mascot" folder on the Desktop

| File | Use |
|---|---|
| 5_shikari_card.png (1000 × 1200) | Upload this: Shikari on the brand card with name and tagline |
| 5_shikari_transparent.png / 5_shikari.svg | Mascot alone, transparent; editable vector |
| 1_sureji_card.png (1000 × 1200) | Alternative: Sure-ji on the brand card |
| 1_sureji_transparent.png (1200 × 1200) | Mascot alone, transparent background, for slides and stickers |
| 1_sureji.svg | Editable vector |
| Same three files for 2_daditulsi, 3_chiku, 4_tikku | Alternatives |